On March 9th six Granville High School graduates of the era gathered at the Museum to talk with both a live and a Zoom audience about growing up in Granville in the 1960s. Among the things discussed and reminiscences enjoyed were many showing the greater level of independence allowed for kids growing up to find and make their own unsupervised entertainments, whether those be informal games, movies at the Opera House, just "hanging out uptown" or perhaps even a little mischief on Halloween. The wide disparity between athletic opportunities for girls and boys at the high school was noted. The 4th of July, while less elaborate than today, was still a huge event of a young person's year.

Although young people were often allowed (and encouraged) to amuse themselves, the panelists noted that the community was still small enough that identities were known by a wide range of adults, so the risk of reports of misbehavior to parents tempered what was done. A pleasant discussion recalled a generally happy time to be young and living in Granville, Ohio.

Busy Busy Busy...

March has been a busy month for the Granville Historical Society both inside and outside. On the inside our exhibits committee has been preparing our new exhibits for the 2022 open season, as well as freshening a few of our popular exhibits. We are eager to open the doors for the new season and to welcome the community and visitors once again.

On the outside, the Old Academy Building and our original building have both had much needed gutter, downspout, flashing and tile work.
